Procedures for the supply and repair of communications equipment in the Soviet Army.

1.

25X1

This equipment consisted of a CW and voice radio transmitter and receiver set together with key and headsets. They also had six wet cell batteries, type NKN - 22, two of which were in use, two were held in reserve, and two were being recharged at the Regiment. The maximum continuous use of these batteries was 18 hours. Along with those batteries, they had an unknown number of 80 v., dry cell batteries type BAS-80, four of which were used once in awhile, and two of which were held in reserve and were to be used only in the event of war.

2.
